Celebrating National Admin Staff Day across WUTH

Colleagues across Wirral University Teaching Hospital came together this week to celebrate National Admin Staff Day, recognising the vital role administrative teams play in keeping services running smoothly.

Administrative staff are at the heart of our organisation, supporting patients, colleagues and services every day. From managing appointments and welcoming patients, to coordinating care behind the scenes, their contribution is essential to the delivery of high-quality care.

To mark the day, Alison Hughes, Director of Corporate Affairs and Communications, visited teams across the Trust to personally thank colleagues and present staff recognition certificates. These were awarded following outstanding patient feedback, highlighting the compassion, professionalism and dedication shown by admin staff in a wide range of roles.

Colleagues from departments across the organisation were recognised, with many sharing how much they value their teams, take pride in supporting patients and appreciate being acknowledged through feedback.

The celebrations highlighted not only long-standing commitment, with some colleagues dedicating decades of service, but also the impact of newer team members who are already making a difference.

National Admin Staff Day provided an opportunity to reflect on the important role admin colleagues play, often behind the scenes, in shaping patient experience and supporting the wider NHS.

Thank you to all our administrative colleagues for the difference you make every single day.
